

Wild Whiffs and Silent Smells

The world of secret scents

Beyond our human noses, there are clouds of scent, mostly trails and mysterious odours that animals use to communicate with one another. And prey, avoid predators, mark territory and find mates. From ants to sharks, all kinds of animals are small to survive.

(Discover secret scents in the Andes and Southern seas.)

They use an amazing sense of smell to navigate their world. Their sense of smell is 100 to 1000 times better than a human's.

Like all bears, Giant Andean Bears depend on their sense of smell... in the dense forests they smell up food or sniff out their prey.

The Andean bear is a solitary bear of smell.
By sniffing on the forest floor they find food hiding in water up to 100 metres (330 feet) away.

Sometimes even an 'invisible' smell' should not be prey by sniffing only a distant drop of blood in the water.

They find the best food to eat in the forest.
They find the best food to eat in the forest.
They find the best food to eat in the forest.
