

THE MIDDLE WEST

DOWN, WEST, THESE WHITE-SHIRTED BUSINESSMEN LEFT THEIR OFFICES AT 5 O'CLOCK AND WORKED TILL DARK ON HEAVY FARMS WHERE WILD WINDS BLOW IN

the farms and towns and cities of the American West the first thin winds of winter are now to blow. In other years winter has brought a kind of peace to the big States that lie in the heart of the United States. But this year the West is at war. A million of its sons have left to fight on every continent and sea. The men have worked long hours to harvest the wheat (see above). The Middle West is now the breadbasket of the United Nations; its great reservation is a strange paradox to the Middle West; in a land that swarms with fat pigs and cattle it is sometimes difficult to buy bacon and milk.

The war is making other changes in the Middle West. From its plains and along its slow rivers the smoke of huge new war industries is rising. In the towns everyone has money to spend; the Middle West is having a cash boom. Overhead warplanes fly in flocks from coast to coast, bringing the war very close to Topeka and Sedalia and Des Moines. The Middle West is not so isolated as it once was. That old word, "isolated," has gone with the wind. It has gone the limits for political isolation. The Middle West does not look as remote as the Pacific Coast and it does not talk as slowly as the South. In fact a great many Midwesterners, though they buy bonds and turn in war stamps, are emotionally interested in what they call "the war." Yet, hardly for the country. The war is not so much in the Middle West.
