

Daniel and Michelle lived with their mum and dad in a seaside town on the south coast. One autumn day the weather suddenly changed and the wind got up. They switched on the TV to see the weather forecast, "It will be alright," the weatherman said, "the hurricane will pass us by and not hit the country."

However, as the afternoon turned into evening and the sky darkened, wind swirled around in gusts getting louder and louder and stronger and stronger. Trees swayed and branches broke off. Daniel and Michelle moved away from the windows and hid behind the sofa. The lights flickered, the electricity went off and they were plunged into darkness. Suddenly one of the windows was hit by something flying through the air and the glass smashed.

They didn't get much sleep that night because of the howling wind and rain which echoed in the dark rooms.

They awoke the following morning to quiet and calmness. When they looked out of the window they saw that the garden shed had blown over and several fence panels were lying on the grass, broken into pieces.

Due to the storm damage the schools were closed so Daniel and Michelle went for a walk around the town. They saw that many chimneys had fallen down, some smashing the cars below and trees had uprooted and were blocking the roads.

The weatherman had clearly been wrong!
