Anonymous, 2008-01-01 once upon a time there lived in the city of Bagdad a young man called Jalaladdeen It was not his native place but in his early days his father had taken up his abode there He was however little acquainted with the town in which he had grown up a sturdy youth for his father inhabited a small house in one of the suburbs and lived a very retired and frugal life They managed their household affairs and cultivated their small garden without the aid of any domestics One day the father feeling his end approaching called for his son once more to his bed side before his death and said to him Jalaladdeen my dearest son thou seest that I have arrived at the bourne of my earthly career now I should joyously quit this life were it not for the thought that I must leave thee here alone After my death thou wilt find that thou are not so poor as thou mayest have conceived and that too with good reason from our hitherto contracted habits of life Nevertheless guard against the impression that thou art in possession of inexhaustible riches Reflect that a year has three hundred and sixty five days and that the smallest expenditure when it occurs daily will in the end amount to no inconsiderable sum Pay careful heed therefore to these my instructions and be contented with the necessities of life Provide that which is indispensable to thy subsistence but beware of purchasing superfluities Man s wants increase daily if he do not accustom himself in his early days to practise self denial But shouldest thou ever be so unhappy as to neglect these my sincere cautions and consequently fall into poverty I have only this piece of advice left for thee Take this rope fasten it to the nail in yonder wall and pull stoutly three times After these words with his latest strength he drew a new rope from under the head of his bed and presented it to Jalaladdeen the next moment he expired So remarkable was the last lesson of the dying father to Jalaladdeen that he carefully preserved the rope The care of the funeral of the deceased and the grief for the loss of his parent and his own abandonment in the world occupied Jalaladdeen s mind for the first week but soon the household matters demanded his attention and he speedily found his father s words verified One day he discovered in a chamber which his father had always kept locked and which he himself had never before entered a great quantity of gold and jewels He still however persevered in his accustomed solitary and frugal life in the same manner as before the death of his father He fetched his daily provisions for himself worked in his garden and dressed his own food One day it happened that as he went to fetch a piece of meat from his butcher he passed a house adjacent to his own from an inner room of which there sounded joyous voices jokes songs and laughter He felt a desire to open the door a little and to peep in and a tastefully furnished chamber hung with light blue silk draperies ornamented with golden lace presented itself to his view Beneath a canopy reclined five richly dressed young men at a table covered with a costly cloth on which stood dishes and plates On a side board stood drinking vessels and jugs and five slaves were busily employed in serving the company with viands and liquors At sight of this cheerful and joyous assemblage Jalaladdeen felt discontented with his lot
