History of the Imagination Norman Lock,2004 A History of the Imagination is a postmodern tale of adventure that reshapes the parameters of time and space thought and action In a metaphorical Africa replete with nostalgia but no dimensions anything can happen and usually does The narrator defends his magical departures saying his is a history of possibilities where fiction is no less real for it s being so But when Darwin s corpse begins to lust after Colette and the African porters go on strike because the author hasn t acknowledged the important role they play we are left to wonder just how far is reality from dreams Norman Lock juxtaposes remote times and places historical facts and literary fictions to create an absurdist collage reminiscent of Guy Davenport and Donald Barthelme In this world it is not impossible to sail from Mombasa to Cinncinati or to set out from the City of Radiant Objects where things are free of the obligation to signify or to go hunting icebergs in a quest to avenge the Titanic at last Borne aloft by Wilbur Wright Jules Verne Ziegfield and Houdini we find ourselves lost again in a seam in the world between History and Imagination Let's Go Pacific
