On the 19th of July 1972, a feature length article was published by the leading architectural magazine, the Architects' Journal, which showcased buildings around Lancaster. The article was published to coincide with a conference hosted by the Royal Institute of British Architects at Lancaster University's recently opened Bailrigg Campus.

Just over 50 photographs were taken by architectural photographer Sam Lambert, providing an interesting snapshot of life in Lancaster in 1972. The images recorded some of the city's key buildings as well as a number of street-scenes. After the exhibition these images were archived in the RIBA's Digital Library.

The photographs show a variety of buildings from medieval Lancaster Castle, to the Georgian and Victorian splendour of Dalton Square, and the magnificent Edwardian Ashton Memorial. The photographs also show terraced streets and everyday life, portraying Lancaster in a much quieter and different era. Some things in Lancaster have changed since 1972, and some things haven't.

To mark 50 years since the original photographs were taken, LANCSA (the local branch of the Royal Institute of British Architects) have obtained the original photos from RIBA Pic. The images have been retaken in July and August 2022, in the exact same locations (plus a few more).

As well as showcasing the amazing historic buildings in Lancaster, the exhibition highlights the positives and negatives of change over the last 50 years. It will provide some surprises for those who weren't around in 1972, whilst providing a trip down memory lane for those who were!
