Annotated John Buchan, 2020-10-21 The House of the Four Winds is a 1935 adventure novel by the Scots author John Buchan. It is a Ruritanian romance and the last of his three Dickson McCunn books. The novel is set in the fictional Central European country of Evallonia and opens two years after the events recounted in Castle Gay. The House of Four Winds - Large Print Edition John Buchan, 2020-11-18 The novel is set in the fictional Central European country of Evallonia. It concerns the involvement of some Scottish visitors in the overthrow of a corrupt republic and the restoration of the monarchy. It is a sequel to Castle Gay in which some Evallonians visited Scotland on a secret mission two years before the start of this novel. The inn at Kremisch the Stag with the Two Heads has an upper room so bowed with age that it leans drunkenly over the village street. It is a bare place which must be chilly in winter for the old casement has many chinks in it and the china stove does not look efficient and the rough beechen table marked by many beer mugs and the seats of beechwood and hide are scarcely luxurious. But on this summer night to one who had been tramping all day on roads deep in white dust under a merciless sun it seemed a haven of ease. Jaikie had eaten an admirable supper on a corner of the table: a supper of cold ham, an omelet, hot toasted rye cakes and a seductive cheese. He had drunk wine tapped from a barrel and cold as water from a mountain spring and had concluded with coffee and cream in a blue cup as large as a basin. Now he could light his pipe and watch the green dusk deepen behind the onion spire of the village church. The milestones in his journey had been the wines. Jaikie was no connoisseur and indeed as a rule preferred beer, but the vintage of a place seemed to give him the place's flavour and wines made a diary of his pilgrimage. His legs bore him from valley to valley but he drank himself from atmosphere to atmosphere. He had begun among strong burgundies which needed water to make a thirst-quenching drink and continued through the thin wines of the hills to the coarse red stuff of south Germany and a dozen forgotten little local products. In one upland place he had found a drink like the grey wine of Anjou; in another a sweet thing like Madeira; and in another a fiery sherry. Each night at the end of his tramp he concocted a long drink and he stuck manfully to the juice of the grape, so having a delicate palate and a good memory he had now behind him a map of his track picked out in honest liquors. Each was associated with some vision of sun-drenched landscape. He had been a month on the tramp but he seemed to have walked through continents. As he half dozed at the open window it was pleasant to let his fancy run back along the road. It had led him through vineyards grey at the fringes with dust through baking beet fields and drowsy cornlands and solemn forests up into wooded hills and flowery meadows and once or twice almost into the jaws of the great mountains through every kind of human settlement from hamlets which were only larger farms to brisk burghs clustered round opulent town houses or castles as old as Charlemagne by every kind of stream, unfordable great rivers and milky mountain torrents and reedy lowland waters and clear brooks slipping through mint and water cress. He had walked and walked seeking to travel and not to arrive and making no plans except that his face was always to the sunrise. He was very dimly aware at any moment of his whereabouts for his sole map was a sketchy thing out of a Continental Bradshaw. But he had walked himself into contentment At the start he had been restless and lonely He wished that he could have brought Woolworth now languishing at Blawearry but he could not condemn that long suffering terrier to months of quarantine He wrote disconsolate letters to Alison in his vile handwriting and received from her at various postes restantes replies which revealed the dullness of her own life at Unnutz The House of Four Winds Ziolkowski, Carmen,1987 The Apocalypse Explained: Chapters VII-X Emanuel Swedenborg,1928 The House of the Four Winds John Buchan,2020-09 The Republican Government of Evallonia is failing and there is a throne waiting for someone But there are two claimants and each one is so strong that the kingdom hangs in the balance The Glasgow gang known as the Gorbals Die hards cannot resist the temptation to get involved in such a tantalising situation One by one they turn up where the danger appears keenest ostensibly for the most peaceable reasons But they are soon plotting and scheming as deeply as the citizens of Evallonia Jaikie Galt is lured into the plot by Randal Glynde who steps in at an upper window one night from the back of an elephant Dickson McCunn the middle aged grocer impersonates an archduke wearing the purple as if born to it and of course Archie Roylance and Dougal are there too
