Crime,

Genes, Neuroscience and Cyberspace Tim Owen, 2017-09-18 This book applies Owen's unique genetic social framework to the study of crime and criminal behaviour with an emphasis on cybercrime. Moving beyond challenges which confront contemporary criminological theorizing such as the stagnation of critical criminology, the relativistic nihilism of the cultural turn, posthumanism and virtual criminology, the author codifies and applies the latest version of the framework to the study of crime both in and out of cyberspace. Drawing upon evolutionary psychology, behavioural genetics and the philosophy of Heidegger, he introduces new terms such as Neuro Agency and notions of Embodied Cognition into criminological theorizing. Adopting a soft compatibilist approach to free will and Realist ontology, Owen's meta-theoretical focus provides a new direction for criminological theorizing in particular in the direction of the conceptualization and prediction of cyber violence. Exciting and timely, this book will appeal to scholars and advanced students of criminology, law, sociology, social policy, psychology, philosophy, policing and forensic investigation.

Science in Society Matthew David, 2017-03-16 Science Technoscience has moved to centre stage in debates over change, power and justice in twenty-first century societies. This text provides a general framework for understanding, combining and applying the rich range of approaches that exist within sociology about science, in particular the role and limitations of science in generating knowledge and the relationship between scientific knowledge and social progress. Drawing on case studies from the past up until today's new genetics, this is a clear, even-handed and comprehensive introduction to the field.

Gender and Genetics Kate Reed, 2012-05-16 Prenatal screening for genetic disorders is becoming an increasingly widespread phenomenon across the globe. While studies have highlighted the importance of women's experiences of such screening, little is known about men's roles and direct involvement in this process. With a focus on the experiences of both women and men, this text offers an innovative and passionate account of the gendered nature of prenatal screening. Drawing on interview data with pregnant women and their male partners in a UK city, Reed provides a compelling analysis of maternal and paternal roles in prenatal screening. Through this analysis, the book raises important issues around genetics, gender and screening practice. With a focus on the gendered production of good and bad genes, the book explores differences between visual technologies and blood screening. It also explores the gendered nature of genetic responsibility and the impact this has on parenting roles. Extending its arguments into other key debates in prenatal genetics, including a focus on the impact of screening on other types of stratification, including ethnicity and class, Reed provides an original and comprehensive analysis of some of the most pressing concerns in the field to date. This book will be of interest to students and scholars of the sociology of health and illness, science and technology studies, gender studies, feminist bioethics and medical anthropology, as well as professionals in the fields of midwifery and genetic counselling.
