Defining Digital Literacy in the Age of Computational Propaganda and Hate Spin Politics

Aqida Nuril Salma

Faculty of Social and Political Sciences, Universitas Gadjah Mada

Abstract

In this era, people's lives are intertwined with the Internet and digital media although society might have to bear potential negative effects of these platforms. Free flow of information and the rise of hate speech, fake news and disinformation on the Internet have no doubt increased social polarization. Furthermore, a new phenomenon has arisen, which combines hate speech with indignation or offence-taking, and that is hate spin. Hate spin uses hate speech and fake news as a weapon to gain access to political power. Hate spin is considered to be one of the biggest threats to any democratic country, including Indonesia. A relatively young democracy and its reputation for religious moderation and diversity, Indonesia has not been immune to the hoax epidemic plaguing societies around the world recently. Scholars assume that improving digital literacy is the best solution against hate spin in Indonesia. However, the current concept of digital literacy has been limited as merely a matter of technical skill. This paper offers an analysis on how to define the contemporary digital literacy concept that has moved beyond basic Internet access, and on how the technology works and is used by political elites with evidence of computational propaganda delivered through political bots, fake accounts and false news during recent political events in Indonesia.

1. Introduction

Across the globe, social media has increasingly become an important venue for interacting with others, spread ideas, influence opinions and most importantly, becoming people's trusted sources of information, even more than the websites and conventional mass media. By most estimates, in 2020 everyone around the world will effectively be online (Woolley & Howard, 2016). Although motivations for social media consumption may vary widely among individuals, the adoption of social media is such an indisputable trend that has increased every year over the last decade. Therefore, the evolution of digital media provides an important context for the analyses. Society today is radically changed with the digitalization of communication. As Castells shows us on his new
