

and a damsel whom they love. However, it is possible to enter by two paths the water-bridge,' because the bridge is under water, and there is the same amount of water beneath it as above it, so that the bridge is exactly in the middle, and it is only a foot and a half in width and in thickness. This choice is certainly to be avoided, and yet it is the less dangerous of the two. The other bridge is still more impracticable and much more perilous, never having been crossed by man. It is just like a sharp sword, and therefore all the people call it 'the sword-bridge.' Now I have told you all the truth I know."

The test of the cart, then, was the first of an increasing series. Lancelot hesitated only for a couple of steps and jumped in, feeling no concern about the shame; for "love was enclosed within his heart." Sir Gawain, on the other hand, when he rode up to the cart and was briefly told by the dwarf to get in if he wished to know anything of the queen, considered the command great foolishness, and said that he would not; for it would be dishonorable to exchange a horse for a cart.¹ And so he followed the cart with Lancelot and the dwarf in it, preserving for himself the dignity of knighthood, while the people of the next town greatly amazed to see the other in the cart, took no pains to conceal their feelings, but great and small, old and young, shouted their taunts in the streets.

The dwarf conducted the knight to a lodging place, a tower which stood on the same level over against the town, and Gawain following the horse and cart, dismounted and entered the town.

¹ [The exchange is a great degradation, representing, metaphorically, the exchange of the solar vehicle for the human body, the latter being a "cart" in the sense of the Platonic and Indian, "chariot symbolism." This is the point at issue, as every solar hero does once, "hesitates" ("May this up be my chariot," says the hero's hesitation to preach, etc.). Hence the importance of the point.—A.K.C.]
