Definition of a youth ministry

It is a grouping that is age restrictive and has a common objective in its operations. The youth ministry is guided by a common faith upon which its believers source their togetherness. The sole aim for the formation of the youth ministry is to encourage the young people to learn more about their faith and engage themselves in spirituality. It is also aimed at reaching out to the big population which has never had an opportunity to hear the gospel. The organization also enhances youth integration where open activities in recreational avenues are enjoyed by the participating members. All these objectives are entitled to the creation of strong bonding among the young people in society.

The ministry has a difference in meaning depending on the denomination it falls into. The protestant churches regard the ministry as the service extended by the ordained ministers or pastors. Ordained clergy, lay leader, or a volunteer person can also initiate the ministry's operations in the case of youth. On the other hand, the Roman Catholic Church believes that youth ministry is not a clergy membership but a function of the church. Therefore, the term youth ministry leaders are more exhibited other than the youth minister. This difference in leadership terms gives the extent of the church's control over the ministry.

In unitary universalism, youth ministry involves a large congregation formed by members from a vast region. For instance, we have the young religious Unitarian Universalists (YRUU) which is ranked as one of the largest youth ministries in the world. The objective of such ministries changes with time to suit the prevailing issues in the youth departments. Some of the core objectives include youth empowerment, partnership, and the implementation of educational programs.
