The Killer's Den Mark S. Schubert, 2008-10-24 Twelve people awaken in a strange house with no phone and no exits. They are completely shut out from the outside world. They do not know each other; they don't even remember who they are themselves. An observer comes over an intercom to tell them they all volunteered for a unique sociological experiment: their memories have been blocked, and they are to live for the next year in this enclosed house. But there is a catch: one of them was a convicted killer prior to the induced amnesia. The study is specifically aimed at whether murderous intent is learned or innate. Out of necessity, they begin to build relationships and allegiances, only to find that trust and cooperation begins to deteriorate once people begin to die. The group continuously battles distrust and panic, and the social order breaks down again and again, threatening more lives. The thin layer of cohesion the group desperately needs to survive.

The extent the killer plans on just how he will prepare himself for these killings and the way he does them is unbelievable. Some of the chances he takes shows his nerve and determination. This story shows what police work is about. There is some excitement, some danger, and some dullness Above it all it shows the dedication most police officers have
