Secure Coordination Control of Networked Robotic Systems Xiaolei Li, Jiange Wang, Xiaoyuan Luo, Xinping Guan, 2024-03-19 As one of the core equipments and actuators robotic technology has attracted much attention and has made great progress However a single robotic system is often unable to handle complex tasks due to limitations in sensors microprocessors actuators and the ability to handle complex situations With the development of distributed control and microprocessing technology networked robotic systems have greatly expanded their perceptual computational and execution capabilities with high efficiency low cost and strong functionality advantages As a typical distributed cyber physical system DCPS which is an intelligent system that integrates computing communication and control networked robotic systems can perform higher level tasks by sharing information and working together It can provide intelligent control and monitoring of a physical process such as environment observation information collection and search and rescue etc Thus coordination control of networked robotic systems has become the focus of scholars worldwide However the sensing communication and control integration of networked robotic systems make them face unprecedented network security threats in which cyber attacks have become a major hidden danger to the reliable operation of autonomous unmanned systems Although existing control methods can achieve swarm collaborative control of networked robotic systems the protection of which especially the security of control systems is rarely addressed In this book we conduct research on the secure coordination problem of networked robotic systems from a control theory perspective given the limited communication bandwidth and the increasingly prominent network security threats This book showcases several continuous time and event triggered secure control design and analysis methods for networked robotic systems under different types of cyberattacks Additionally several future research directions are provided for networked robotic systems This book will be an important reference for scientists engineers and graduate students from the field of underwater robotic technologies maritime science and control engineering
