Private experts drafted in to find savings as MPs question Chancellor's performance

By Caroline Thomas
SUNDAY TELEGRAPH

RACHAEL REEVES has kicked a war on waste in the House of Commons, but critics are circling her government's efforts to find savings for the Treasury.

In an attempt to get her hands on the Treasury's purse strings, the Chancellor has drafted in private experts to find savings in the public sector. The move has been criticised by MPs, who say it is a sign of a government that is not confident in its own ability to find savings.

Writing in The Sunday Telegraph, James Bevan, a Conservative MP, says: "The Chancellor's decision to draft in private experts to find savings is a sign of a government that is not confident in its own ability to find savings."

"The support for her has evaporated – even those who supported her at first are now wavering."

He added that "challenger members" of the House of Commons are "beginning to question her competence" and that "the support for her has evaporated – even those who supported her at first are now wavering."
