Implementing Nullification Jessica Johnson,2012 In 1832 a convention in South Carolina passed an ordinance nullifying the 1828 Tariff of Abominations and the 1832 Compromise Tariff The people of the state waited four years between the passage of the Tariff of Abominations and nullification Nullifiers those who favored nullification waited because they saw the tariff not as the primary problem itself but an indication of the problem From their perspective the tariffs demonstrated the disturbing trend toward consolidation in the nation at the expense of state power The nullifiers basing their ideas on precedents of previous state rights actions sought to nullify the tariffs to assert the sovereignty of the states over the sovereignty of the general government They waited four years to nullify the 1828 tariff because in 1828 they still hoped the general government would change making nullification unnecessary By 1832 however that hope was gone and nullification became their only choice The Nullification Controversy in South Carolina.
