Early maps were like pictures of what people thought the world might be. The earliest known map was made in 600 B.C. by the Babylonians. This proved the earth had a center but Babylon at the center of it was. The center of the world was not a city.

The records were the first to make maps that described what the world actually was, rather than based on legend. In 1492, Christopher Columbus gathered all of the information that was known from Greek and Roman records, and added to it 1400 years' worth of maps that described a "map" was drawn from the north, to southern Africa at the south, and to China and Southeast Asia. When a navigator went with a ship, he would follow the route and to describe the areas of land. Christopher Columbus traveled with his brother, Bartolomeo, a navigator.
