

Documenting the Early Images of Foreign Dress

Just as tourists wanted to document nature untouched by man, they also hoped to look at people gathered in cities unaltered by the assaults of change. To learn that the Egyptian queen still kept her wooden shap and winged cap or that an officer in the Egyptian cavalry was dressed and equipped in a manner reminiscent of the Arabian Nights was to escape into a romantic and seemingly simpler world. The disturbing reality—one of decades of war and political upheaval in Europe and the Middle East that had destroyed the most legendary cities and sites of antiquity—hardly intruded upon the vivid representations of clothing that had seemed those safe presences of civilization and evolution.

Given their celebration of the permanent character of regional and occupational dress, it is no wonder that the artist characterizations of historical costumes took care not to have their work confused with a fashion plate. A fashion plate must perpetuate the vision of the perfection of a place of clothing or outfit and the necessity of being it is made. Until about the mid-nineteenth century a typical plate displayed a well-dressed figure, white or naturally panned. Backgrounds are muted to nonexistent, and since the interest is clothing fit to one's sake, anything that might distract from that interest is muted. Whereas the fashion plate tells us what we should be wearing, a costume illustration documents what a person very differences to being it has. François Hippolyte Lalonde, 1840. Hand-colored lithograph, 1847's 1847. A representation of the costume of a gentleman from the market town of Beauvais from Lalonde's Costume des Français, a collection of costumes inspired by clothing worn by the inhabitants of the French regions of Brittany, Lorraine, who exhibited in the Paris Salon between 1840 and 1870, is known mainly for his portraits and other paintings. Lalonde's Costume des Français.

ent from ourselves is wearing, and perhaps why he or she has continued to wear it for a lifetime. To be sure, the illustration of a walking costume tells other the details of dress, but finds equal delight in sketching in atmosphere and setting. People are often portrayed near a local landmark or an architectural monument, or in a domestic interior. The artist is more inclined with an appreciative reporting of human experience than with an idealization of what is to come.

For example, the French painter Louis Dupré made an extended journey to Athens and Constantinople in 1834, and he commemorated it with a highly praised volume concentrating largely on Greek and Turkish personages clothed according to their occupation or social status, but art and ethnography, not fashion, were his priorities. The splendor of costumes and ceremonial robes certainly intrigued Dupré, yet he was equally fascinated by faces, postures, landscapes and architectural remains. No greater compliment could have been paid to Dupré than when Miss, Lady, or Mrs. [name] purchased that her drawings conveyed the brilliant colors of Greece that she had ever seen. With Visage d'athènes et de Constantinople, Dupré had created one of the more distinguished travel albums of the day but he was one of many artists who responded superbly to the challenge of depicting the possibilities of a newly expanding world. He died in 1857, two years before the advent of photography, which would soon triumph as the ultimate art form for recording the monuments and marvels of travel. □
