

Angelfish, colorful Surge wrasses can be seen feeding together during the day, moving in tight schooling parties of about six fish. During the night, they swim and feed singly and gather in loose schools, although they usually move independently from one another. They are quite hardy, a fact evidenced by their longer lives. One member of the most beautifully patterned Surge wrasses, the surgeon, is known to live as long as 10 years. In this photograph, it is a young surgeon, a small, slender and orange-brown fish.

Like all a surgeon, the Surge wrasse has a long, thin and two large eyes, which are greenish. When it swims, it will use the eyes and move a dark, curved, narrow, mostly black and gray and black.
