Synchronizing E-Security Godfried Williams, 2004 Most leading IT companies in developing economies purchase expensive equipment which ensure fully secure transaction services provided to organizations that exchange funds through electronic means The rationale behind this hypothesis is based on the strong competition that exists among these leading IT companies Contrary to companies in developing economies there has been a certain level of complacency among advanced economies although some academics and practitioners might disagree with this view The irony of this analysis is that while investments in security among IT companies in advanced economies are limited in budget the methods employed for assessing possible risks in the application of technologies are normally high in cost Synchronizing E Security is a critical investigation and empirical analysis of studies conducted among companies that support electronic commerce transactions in both advanced and developing economies This book presents insights into the validity and credibility of current risk assessment methods that support electronic transactions in the global economy Synchronizing E Security focuses on a number of case studies of IT companies within selected countries in West Africa Europe Asia and the United States The foundation of this work is based on previous studies by Williams G Avudzivi P V Hawaii 2002 on the retrospective view of information security management and the impact of tele banking on the end user Synchronizing E Security is designed for a professional audience composed of researchers and
