closing in when a lad of some sixteen years of age stood gazing across the swollen waters of the Nith rushing past in turbid flood. He scarce seemed conscious of the pouring rain but with his lowland bonnet pressed down over his eyes and his plaid wrapped tightly round him he stood on a rising hummock of ground at the edge of the flood and looked across the stream. If they are not here soon he said to himself they will not get across the Nith tonight. None but bold riders could do so now but by what uncle says Captain Hume must be that and more. Ah here they come. As he spoke two horsemen rode down the opposite side of the valley and halted at the water's edge. The prospect was not a pleasant one. The river was sixty or seventy feet wide and in the centre the water swept along in a raging current. You cannot cross here the boy shouted at the top of his voice. You must go higher up where the water's deeper. The wind swept his words away but his gestures were understood. The boy is telling us to go higher up said one of the horsemen. I suppose he is the other replied but here is the ford. You see the road we have travelled ends here and I can see it again on the other side. It is getting dark and were we to cross higher up we might lose our way and get bogged. It is years since I was here. What's the boy going to do now. Show us a place for crossing. The lad on seeing the hesitation of the horsemen had run along the bank up the stream and to their surprise when he had gone a little more than a hundred yards he dashed into the water. For a time the water was shallow and he waded out until he reached the edge of the regular bank of the river and then swam out into the current. Go back the horseman shouted but his voice did not reach the swimmer who in a few strokes was in the full force of the stream and was soon lost to the sight of the horsemen among the short foaming waves of the torrent. The boy will be drowned one of the horsemen said spurring his horse up the valley but in another minute the lad was seen breasting the calmer water just above the ford. You cannot cross here Captain Hume he said as he approached the horsemen. You must go nigh a mile up the river. Why who are you lad the horseman asked and how do you know my name. I'm the nephew of Nigel Grahame. Seeing how deep the floods were I came out to show you the way for the best horse in the world could not swim the Nith here now. But this is the ford Captain Hume said. Yes this is the ford in dry weather. The bottom here is hard rock and easy to ride over when the river is but waist deep but below and above this place it is covered with great boulders. The water is six feet deep here now and the horses would be carried down among the rocks and would never get across. A mile up the river is always deep and though the current is strong there is nothing to prevent a bold horseman from swimming across. I thank you heartily young sir Captain Hume said. I can see how broken is the surface of the water and doubt not that it would have fared hard with us had we attempted to swim across here. In faith Munro we have had a narrow escape. Ay indeed the other agreed. It would have been hard if you and I after going through all the battlefields of the Low Countries should have been drowned here together in a Scottish burn. Your young friend is a gallant lad and a good swimmer for in truth it was no light task to swim that torrent with the water almost as cold as ice. Now sirs will you please to ride on the boy said it is getting dark fast and the sooner we are across the better. So saying he went off at a fast run the horses trotting behind him. A mile above he reached the spot he had spoken of. The river was narrower here and the stream was running with great rapidity swirling and heaving as it went but with a smooth even surface Two hundred yards farther up the boy said is the beginning of the deep if you take the water there you will get across so as to climb up by that sloping bank just opposite He led the way to the spot he indicated and then plunged into the stream swimming quietly and steadily across and allowing the stream to drift him down The horsemen followed his example They had swum many a swollen river and although their horses snorted and plunged at first they soon quieted down and swam steadily over They just struck the spot which the boy had indicated He had already arrived there and without a word trotted forward It was soon dark and the horsemen were obliged to keep close to his heels to see his figure It was as much as they could do to keep up with him for the ground was rough and broken sometimes swampy sometimes strewn with boulders It is well we have a guide Colonel Munro said to his companion for assuredly even had we got safely across the stream we should never have found our way across such a country as this Scotland is a fine country Hume a grand country and we are all proud of it you know but for campaigning give me the plains of Germany while as for your weather here it is only fit for a water rat
