

If you are issuing `dbstop` to stop a locally-running server, you can simply specify the name of the database server in `[name]`. If the server is not running locally, you need to create a connection to the server before you can tell it to stop. The `-c` switch allows you to specify a connection string for the database running on the server that you would like to stop. To stop `MyServer`, execute the following command:

```
dbstop -c "uid=DBA;pwd=SQL;eng=MyServer;db=MyDatabase"
```

In this instance, you could also just give the server name, since the server is running locally:

dbstop MyServer

The first command connects to the database named `MyDatabase` on the server `MyServer`, then stops the server named `MyServer`. In the case that no databases are active on the server, you have to add `"db=utility_db"` to the connection string.

Let's say `"Club"` is the name of one of the databases running on a server named `"Goliath,"` and you want to stop all the databases running on `Goliath`, including `Club`. The following command accomplishes that, as well as shutting down the database server:

dbstop -c "uid=DBA;pwd=SQL;eng=Goliath;db=Club"
```

If you have a database server named `"David"` running without any databases started on it, you can stop the server using the following command:

dbstop -c "uid=DBA;pwd=SQL;eng=David;db=utility_db"
```

The syntax for the `STOP ENGINE` statement is as follows:

```
STOP ENGINE [ server-name ] [ UNCONDITIONALLY ]

The server named `server-name` is stopped. If `server-name` is omitted, the currently running database server is stopped. If `UNCONDITIONALLY` is specified, the database server is stopped whether or not there are still connections to the server.

4.4. Stopping databases

It's also possible to stop individual databases without stopping the server, or any of the other databases that might be running on it. To do so, use the `STOP DATABASE` SQL statement.

Syntax:

STOP DATABASE database-name [ON engine-name] [UNCONDITIONALLY]
```

You specify the name of the database that you would like to stop in `database-name`, with the restriction that the database specified cannot be the currently connected one. The `"ON engine-name"` clause can be used only in Interactive SQL. You use it to specify the server that the database is running on. Outside of Interactive SQL, the database can only be stopped if it is on the current server. The `UNCONDITIONALLY` keyword forces databases to be stopped, even if there are connections to it. By default, you can't stop a database if there are connections active.
