These processes vary depending on the circumstances (the amount of a substance in a given volume of water, the temperature, the pressure and other conditions involved).

Glucagonin, the active hormone, gives an information about the food and about the time consumed. Yeast buds are the primary gustatory receptors with each taste bud containing three microvilli called gustatory cells. Three taste buds have been recognized: sweet, sour, bitter and salty. In 1970, taste, glucagonin or tasteless, has been reported. This flavor is associated with sweetness, as in itself, however, is not sweet.

Discussion. Evidence that granule cells found with receptor molecules in the surface of the microvilli. The developing receptor-associated vesicles in the basal half of the granule cells, where the granules are characteristically concentrated within the cytoplasm, shift to another segment. Immature cells have shorter filopodia, after which they are replaced by more cells generated from basal cells as the basis of the granule layer.

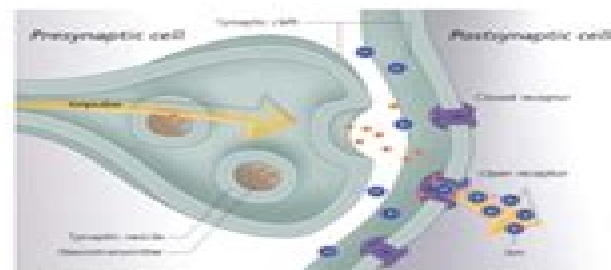

The cause of small  $\alpha$ -caliculi afflictions in the detection of colors. Affliction depends on specialized chemical receptors, or chromophores, located within the affliction epithelium. These receptors can respond to very small quantities of an substance, a molecule that can be analyzed. This feature integrates the input from several different receptors to identify a given color value. Humans can detect about 100,000 colors.

As the fluid flows through the water, the surface across the nasal cavity produces turbulence, bringing sufficient molecules into contact with the olfactory mucosa. Nothing decreases the ability to detect odors by increasing the volume of air inhaled, which can, in fact, decrease the concentration of molecules.

This diagram illustrates the cellular structure of the olfactory mucosa. It shows the olfactory epithelium lining the nasal cavity, with olfactory receptor cells (neurons) and supporting cells. The diagram labels the following structures:

- Olfactory mucosa: Fibers
- Bone
- Basal lamina
- Olfactory gland
- Basal cell
- Olfactory receptor cell
- Supporting cell
- Olfactory axon
- Basal lamina
- Olfactory bulb

Chemicals dissolved in the blood stream are transported by the afferent lymphatics, then bound to transport molecules on the afferent cells. The transport potential that is produced exists along the axis to the afferent bulb, which sends the signal to the higher brain centers. Unlike other systems, the afferent neurons are connected directly to the central system, rather than through the thalamus to the cerebral cortex.

Neurons communicate with other cells at a synapse, the site of a narrow irregular protrusion. The space between the presynaptic, or sending, neurone and the postsynaptic, or receiving, cell is called the synaptic cleft. An impulse arrives at the tip of the axon, the terminal button, where 'messengers' (molecules called neurotransmitters) are highly concentrated. These diffuse across the synaptic cleft to meet the postsynaptic neurone, and the terminal buttons of cells, either initiating or activating neural impulses in the second cell.
