P. Lione,2017-10-30 Taking the Train of Singularity South from Midtown John J. Ronan,2019-09 The general theme of this book and a number of its individual poems is that love and language create community There is little self reference and confession Set in Gloucester New York or Paris in Panama or Newtown the poems come from a commitment to civic poetry a poetry of social place and witness Civic poetry is poems written for the public on community topics poetry accessible to an attentive general audience And since it is often meant to be read in public civic poetry relies on sound and familiar forms rhyming tricks assonance consonance regular rhythms refrain and stanza couplets etc And of course civic poetry like all poetry is insightful well crafted and fresh never talks down and is never watered down Besides accessibility sound rhythm and freshness there is another necessary ingredient in civic poetry hope Not innocent or immature hope nothing naive It may be a battered hope even diminished but is not cowed or faint remains brassy unabashed Civic poetry makes no apologies for believing in our stressed and distorted but wonderful national experiment A Street Girl Named Desire Treasure E.
