

Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of risk factors associated with falls between two groups of nursing home residents. One group consisted of those who had fallen at least once during the previous year and the other group consisted of those who had not fallen during the same period. Data were collected from 106 residents who had fallen and 106 residents who had not fallen. The results showed that there were no significant differences between the two groups in terms of age, gender, race, education, or income. However, there were significant differences in terms of comorbidities, functional status, and cognitive function. Residents who had fallen were more likely to have comorbidities, lower functional status, and lower cognitive function than those who had not fallen.
