The Assyrian Deluge Legend:

The Assyrian Deluge Legend Gerald Massey, 2005-12 This scarce antiquarian book is a facsimile reprint of the original. Due to its age it may contain imperfections such as marks, notations, marginalia and flawed pages. Because we believe this work is culturally important, we have made it available as part of our commitment for protecting, preserving and promoting the world's literature in affordable, high-quality modern editions that are true to the original work.

The Babylonian Legends of the Creation and Story of the Deluge as Told by Assyrian Tablets from Nineveh Sir Ernest Alfred Thompson Wallis Budge, In the spring of 1852 Layard was obliged to close his excavations for want of funds and he returned to England with Rassam leaving all the northern half of the great mound of Kuy njik unexcavated. He resigned his position as Director of Excavations to the Trustees of the British Museum and Colonel later Sir H C Rawlinson, Consul General of Baghdad, undertook to direct any further excavations that might be possible to carry out later on. During the summer the Trustees received a further grant from Parliament for excavations in Assyria and they dispatched Rassam to finish the exploration of Kuy njik, knowing that the lease of the mound of Kuy njik for excavation purposes which he had obtained from its owner had several years to run. When Rassam arrived at Mosul in 1853 and was collecting his men for work, he discovered that Rawlinson, who knew nothing about the lease of the mound which Rassam held, had given the French Consul M. Place permission to excavate the northern half of the mound, i.e. that part of it which he was most anxious to excavate for the British Museum. He protested but in vain and, finding that M. Place intended to hold Rawlinson to his word, devoted himself to clearing out part of the South West Palace which Layard had attacked in 1852. Meanwhile M. Place was busily occupied with the French excavations at Khorsabad, a mound which contained the ruins of the great palace of Sargon II and had no time to open up excavations at Kuy njik. In this way a year passed and as M. Place made no sign that he was going to excavate at Kuy njik and Rassam's time for returning to England was drawing near, the owner of the mound, who was anxious to get the excavations finished so that he might again graze his flocks on the mound, urged Rassam to get to work in spite of Rawlinson's agreement with M. Place. He and Rassam made arrangements to excavate the northern part of the mound clandestinely and by night and on 20th December 1853 the work began. On the first night nothing of importance was found; on the second night the men uncovered a portion of a large bas-relief and on the third night a huge mass of earth collapsed, revealing a very fine bas-relief sculptured with a scene representing Ashur-bani-pal standing in his chariot. The news of the discovery was quickly carried to all parts of the neighbourhood and as it was impossible to keep the diggings secret any longer, the work was continued openly and by day. The last mentioned bas-relief was one of the series that lined the chamber which was 50 feet long and 15 feet wide and illustrated a royal lion hunt.

1 This series, that is to say all of it, that the fire which destroyed the palace had spared, is now in the British Museum, see the Gallery of the Assyrian Saloon.
