Introduction

The 'journal of feminist studies in religion' takes us through what the author believes to be the main reason why women are more inclined to religious practices than men. It is clear that women are the most religious people and they will look out for solutions to their life's questions by being committed to a certain religion¹. This does not however mean that men have no challenges that will prompt them towards religion. As a matter of fact, there are men who are more inclined to religion than some women. The emphasis is however on the ratio of men to women that will resort to religion as a means of handling the situations of life². Apart from the reasons that have been presented by the author, the ultimate one is basically the difference on how both sexes can handle the situations³. Men are generally known to be strong emotionally and also have the ability to persevere in hard situations. In this paper, we focus on the viability of the article and how realistic some of the points presented are.

The method of research

In determining how reliable the information is, the focus is usually on the methods that were used to collect data. The information presented may not necessarily represent the majority, considering the sample group that was used to collect the information. There is also the time factor where a consideration is made on when the information was collected. Data that was collected many years ago may only be used as a reference and not to represent current happenings. The information presented in the data was mostly collected from Brazil over seven years ago. In analyzing the situation, we will look at it basing on the years, when the information was collected.

Reliability of the information

There are a number of reasons that may make the information to be either reliable or not. For instance, there are numerous cultures that are represented in the world that
