The Autobiography of Shakespeare Louis C. Alexander, 2015-09-16 From INTRODUCTION FIVE years ago I laid these following papers aside I was then much broken in health and spirit And I was overwhelmed by the solemn importance of the work and bewildered and almost discouraged by the many inconsistencies with known or rather assumed facts or beliefs and even very often with itself Furthermore doubts of various kinds perhaps I should rather say subtle cross questionings and wonderings at times assailed me but I had only to read some pages almost at random when doubt would vanish like mist before the sun About six months ago I was strongly impelled to complete my obvious duty At my age of seventy two I cannot afford further delays or daring triflings with time Yet I would fain have waited for further corroborations personal literary topographical I earnestly beg all who can help particularly as regards the sermons plays and books which Shakespeare brought to London to communicate with me I have for some months past occupied myself very perseveringly to verify and confirm so far as possible the statements of this momentous though broken and unrevised autobiography I have been ably assisted and I have had a certain success not very much but strangely remarkable Not a word however have I added to my texts of 1905 In the course of those readings searches correspondence etc I some months ago for the first time encountered a legend or speculation that in the year 1910 some greater light would be thrown on this deathless subject In so far as I am consciously concerned it is a simple coincidence or accident as it is termed quaintly interesting but in my view not otherwise noteworthy I now give this work to the world integrally without a word of my own Here and there I had to supply an obviously dropped letter I have omitted some draft playbills and I have dealt discreetly with some words and with some lines of confused repetition without any importance and which would have necessitated inordinate notes to make clear I have also fitted in so to speak two detached portions at what I thought was a suitable place relating to the arrival and earlier life in London Beyond these trifling and merely clerical points and some punctuation I have not altered nor shaped nor endeavoured to harmonise or reconcile with accepted versions or to attenuate patent variances Indeed so anxious am I to be an impartial and faithful editor that I will here set out briefly some of the more striking personal matters which are generally received thus emphasising the differences For the sake of clearness I will for the moment designate the poet as Shakespeare and another William Shakespeare whom I have to mention as simply William using the modern spelling All acknowledged biographers and writers assume that Shakespeare was the son of John of Stratford on Avon who was probably a son of
