Abstract

Eco materiality is a new materialist paradigm arising from the convergence of cultural discourses and radical processes. It stems from a spatial discourse theory of man and the nature of the human context story telling beyond and associated on some anthropocentric readings and ideologies that have greatly failed to address timely human challenges. Eco materialism provides an (inter)weaving of weaving matter that enables study of materialistic, nonanthropocentric and such other binary oppositions like materialism/appearance of meanings. It interrogates the notion of matter (storied matter) and affirms its contextualization of study and its interrelation as a worthy material - storied matter. In eco materialism, matter, humans as one of meaning, a tale of creativity and a platform of expression. Eco materialism affords a deanthropocentric reading of texts across all matters - objects, materials, nature, gender and humans are seen against references interrelating in an ever unfolding meaning. As a new signifying dimension of storied expression, it develops varied and interweaving theories in developing storied matter. It is a new addition to the growing study of eco materialism that requires us to return to the narrations of matter. For humans need learn to listen to other species besides with which he occupies the world. More should learn that in these storied matters are deep ecological meanings of environmental, cultural, political and social dimensions. Natural materials that could save the world. Chuseye Babalunde is a rising poet who whose works have won laurels in Nigeria and overseas. A Good Mourning (2016) is the poet's latest work in an established tradition of eco pragmatism within the theme of the work. Eco materialism which is the lens from which Chuseye Babalunde's A Good Mourning (2016) shall be studied to assess the complexity of matter, narrativity, and meaning. The study among other things, shall illustrate how storied matter is symptomatic of wider meanings that the poet tries to convey in some of the poems in the collection. This is sure to be seen further corroborated in the storied matter.

Keywords: Eco materiality, cultural discourses, radical processes, anthropocentric, non culture, gender, species references, storied matter, humans, nature, material agencies, narrations and environmental dimensions.
