consists in her ability to seize on the disparate details of everyday life and render them as a single perfect whole in which even the most unpalatable reality is made beautiful by the perfection of her art Ludmila Ulitskaya's Diana and End of the Story look at women who lie with verve just to escape dreary reality Permeated with a tolerant humorous warmth Ulitskaya's stories exemplify that strand in the humanist tradition that neither denounces nor deifies but attempts to understand human psychology in its infinitely numerous manifestations Svetlana Alexiyevich a Byelorussian dissident constructs powerful narrative collages out of live human voices culled from her interviews with witnesses to and participants in the most shattering national events She follows life rather than trying to invent it and she does so with great talent and keen vision Her Landscape of Loneliness shows how tragic social circumstances deprive people of the ability to experience and enjoy love Olga Slavnikova a prolific young author from Yekaterinburg depicts provincial life in a town where most of the men are involved in the illegal mining and cutting of precious stones Krylov's Childhood combines memorable characters with ethnographic detail Maria Arbatova a leading feminist famed for her frank outspoken and witty style is Russia's Erica Jong My Name is Woman takes place in an abortion clinic where the heroine reflects on her failed love affair and women's submissive role in love and life Nina Gorlanova sets Lake Joy in her native Siberian city of Perm in the small closed world of a maternity ward As a new life is born their suburb is being flooded and they are moved to new homes to start a new life Anastasia Gosteva takes the reader on an unusual journey around India and America Closing Down America The heroine's attempt to run away from herself and an unrequited love is in fact a desperate effort to come to terms with who she really is Margarita Sharapova draws on her unique personal experience as a circus animal tamer to describe the world of popular entertainment Brilliantly crafted inspired prose unputdownable Natalia Smirnova paints a disquieting picture of a provincial town in the Urals where two cultivated women must survive amidst crude working class surroundings The Women and the Shoemakers Her prose is deep and subtle but by no means female
