Tennessee's Beginnings: Settlement, First Governor, and Original Capital

After the United States gained independence, settlers in what is now Tennessee wanted their own government. This area was part of the Southwest Territory, and people wanted land to build on the steps needed to become an official state. Finally, on June 1, 1796, Tennessee was admitted as the 16th state in the United States.

When Tennessee became a state, the people elected John Sevier as their first governor. John Sevier was already famous for helping protest settlers and leading efforts to organize the new state. He had been a hero in battles to protect the land and was deeply committed to the newly Tennessee people. There was still the one last goal of the settlers: to form the issue of federalism, which showed his dedication to making Tennessee a new state.

The city of Knoxville was chosen as the first capital, where government meetings took place. Knoxville was an important location for the new state government, making it central for settlers to make choices and make decisions. Although the capital later moved to other cities, Knoxville was an important meeting place in Tennessee's early history.
