cities in the Intermountain West to begin their own pilgrimages to the nation's capital. Confronted with distances farther than those covered by European crusaders to the Holy Land, western marchers had to improvise. When railroads refused them or demanded full fare that they didn't have, they commandeered trains. Sometimes they built boats to continue their journeys on one of the major rivers. In the fashion of Mark Twain's Huckleberry Finn, they were real-life adventurers. Alarmed by the possibility of 100,000 unemployed workers converging on the nation's capital, railroad and government officials did everything they could to stop them. This exhaustively researched history tells the story of these dogged marchers who only wanted to work.

History of the Industrial College of the Armed Forces Theodore W. Bauer, 1983. Before World War II the Army Industrial College with its emphasis on the economic aspects of national security was a unique military college with no counterpart in other nations. World War II brought new recognition of the important role of the Industrial College. When the College was reconstituted as a joint service institution after World War II, graduate level instruction was provided in economic mobilization but emphasis soon shifted to the management of defense resources. The Industrial College of the Armed Forces was designated by its charter as an institution at the highest educational level in the Defense Establishment. The Alumni Association of the Industrial College of the Armed Forces undertook the preparation of this history to meet a long recognized need for a comprehensive account of the development of the College. This project is especially timely in view of the 60 year anniversary of the Industrial College on 25 February 1984. The present study emphasizes changes in mission and the evolution of the instructional program. Extensive use was made of the annual reports submitted by the Commandants of the Industrial College to the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

The Role of Federal Military Forces in Domestic Disorders, 1877-1945 Clayton David Laurie, Ronald H. Cole, 1997. Published in 1904, this forgotten classic is sci-fi and dystopia at its best, written by the creator and master of the genre. Following extensive research in the field of growth, Mr. Bensington and Professor Redwood light upon a new mysterious element a food that causes greatly accelerated development Initially christening their discovery The Food of the Gods the two scientists are overwhelmed by the possible ramifications of their creation Needing room for experiments Mr Besington chooses a farm that offers him the chance to test on chickens which duly grow monstrous six or seven times their usual size With the farmer Mr Skinner failing to contain the spread of the Food chaos soon reigns as reports come in of local encounters with monstrous wasps earwigs and rats The chickens escape leaving carnage in their wake The Skinners and Redwoods have both been feeding their children the compound illicitly their eventual offspring will constitute a new age of giants Public opinion rapidly turns against the scientists and society rebels against the world s new flora and fauna Daily life has changed shockingly and now politicians are involved trying to stamp out the Food of the Gods and the giant race Comic and at times surprisingly touching and tragic Wells story is a cautionary tale warning against the rampant advances of science but also of the dangers of greed political infighting and shameless vote seeking
