

throughout the inter-war period. Superseded and displaced by a spreading 'secular' nationalist movement in the successor states of the defeated Ottoman Empire (the last Islamic power), Pan-Islamism gave way to Pan-Arabism, Turkish and Persian nationalism. A new or at least different version of Pan-Islamic ideology informed the periodic (in fact spasmodic) new attempts at seeking solidarity among Muslims. Thus the era of the Islamic Conferences of the twenties and thirties and their successor inter-Muslim institutions after 1945, described by Martin Kramer in his book, Islam assembled (New York, 1986). But these are ad hoc institutions seeking to galvanize Muslims into united action and greater solidarity at state level, that is, the greater integration of Muslim states, or even simply the less ambitious co-operation between them in the cultural, political and economic spheres, and the protection of Muslim minorities throughout the world. The author emphasizes the relative success recently of this particular variant of Muslim activity in promoting Pan-Islam in the economic sphere (banking and finance), and the concern with 'Islamic economics', which also advanced the greater international presence and visibility of Islam. But this did not end disputes between Muslim states, or reduce at all the sharp rivalries for leadership of a Pan-Islamic movement or a community of Islamic states. The Gulf War is only the latest manifestation of deadly inter- and intra-Muslim conflict.

Scholars will appreciate Landau's detailed narrative of the several organizations, groups and movements constituting the Pan-Islamic phenomenon over the last hundred years. His discussion of individual actors in the Pan-Islamic movement may be captious in parts but is thoroughly documented. He is at his best when dealing with the formal adoption of Pan-Islam as a state policy by Sultan Abdul Hamid and the Young Turks, especially before and during the Great War. He has also unearthed what may have been obscure and ephemeral publications of various advocates of Pan-Islam, their propaganda activities and international connexions. While clearly conveying the magnitude of their failure at the time, Professor Landau argues for a link between—actually a continuity from—the activities of an earlier Pan-Islamic movement and the national and international manifestations of a revived movement for greater Islamic co-operation, solidarity and unity of the last three decades. 'After all', he concludes, 'Islam is still the most effective form of consensus within Muslim communities and could serve as the most available mode of commonality among their states, increasingly shaping all-Muslim solidarity. In other words, with Islamism having become a significant political factor in several major Islamic states, Pan-Islam may be seen as a potentially integrative force among these and other states. . . . Then as large parts of the world are moving towards more concrete forms of association, Pan-Islamists too may well turn a 120-years' old dream from what seemed a utopia into a political reality.' Yet Landau does not fail to indicate that the weakness common to both the earlier and later Pan-Islamic movements is the lack of a single leadership. While Muslims everywhere may still subscribe to the ideal of a united umma, permeated and sustained by a sentiment of Islamic brotherhood, or the bond of solidarity, the reality is still very much one of division and confusion, generated to a great extent by the (irresistible?) attraction of secular modernity and the mundane requirements for the survival of independent territorial statehood.

One reservation about this careful and almost complete record of the ideological and practical organizational aspects of Pan-Islam is the overwhelming use of footnote citations whose sheer number could well demolish the reader who is new to the subject.

PETER WOODWARD: Sudan 1898–1989: the unstable state. xiv, 217 pp. Boulder; Lynne Rienner; London: Lester Crook Academic Publishing, 1990. £25.

The book under review is an analysis of the Sudanese state as it developed in the colonial period (1898–1956), and disintegrated since independence (1956–89). The book has three unifying themes: the history of Sudanese politics, the history of external political relations, and the history of economic and social change in the period 1898–1989. Woodward is at his best with the history of Sudanese politics, and he guides the reader quickly and competently through the maze of main events and the network of major players. Woodward decided not to draw on the Arabic Sudanese press, and therefore a regular reader of Africa Confidential would find little new information and no corroborating evidence in his account of the post-1985 period, either with regard to internal politics or external political relations. Nevertheless, as a brief survey of political events and personalities, this book will be a useful reference for specialists and non-specialists alike.

Woodward is weakest when dealing with the third theme, the history of economic and social change, in particular the state's impact on the development of ethnic identity, religion and class. The author's concept of ethnic identity is historical and—in comparison to his predecessors in the field of politics—sophisticated; there is no trace here of attempts to ascribe 'primordial' tribal instincts to the Sudanese. The author is less precise in defining the unit of analysis called 'religion', but in contrast to the Orientalists he does not reify it, nor see it as unchanging and monolithic. The problem lies with his concept of class, for which he gives no definition, and the use of which is ahistorical, vague and incoherent. First, while Woodward discusses 'the social inheritance' of pre-colonial Sudan in terms of (some, randomly chosen) ethnic groups and the main religious brotherhoods, he hardly mentions the Sudan's long tradition of state formation and ignores the recent literature on pre-colonial states and their class composition; the reader is led to believe that the Sudan entered the colonial period with ethnic groups and religious brotherhoods, but without classes. To analyse the impact of the Turco-Egyptian period (1821–82), the Sudan's first colonial period, Woodward

Sudan 1898-1989 The Unstable State:

War and Politics in Sudan Justin D. Leach, 2012-11-26 On 9 July 2011 South Sudan became an independent state after more than half a century of civil conflict wrought with human rights abuse. Indeed, the post-colonial history of Sudan has been characterised by two Civil Wars spanning almost two decades each: the first from 1955-1972 and the second from 1983-2005. With questions of national and regional identity at the heart of the conflict, the Sudanese Civil Wars have highlighted key questions about the post-colonial epoch. Justin Leach's War and Politics in the Sudan offers a comparative analysis of the First and Second Sudanese Civil Wars along with the peace treaties which ended them. Most historians have seen the 1972 Addis Ababa Agreement as a stepping stone to renewed civil conflict in 1983 rather than as a settlement in its own right. Leach, on the other hand, believes that the size of Sudan precludes the application of traditional theories of conflict resolution. The introduction of natural resources brought a new facet to the already complex Second Sudanese Civil War. Oil, for instance, internationalised the conflict and added yet another prism through which groups in the conflict could view their identity. By tracing the evolving demands of the southern insurgents and the regimes they fought against, Leach outlines the main challenges to the Sudanese nationalist project, including the strength of southern regional identities, the resurgence of political Islam in the north, as well as the sheer duration of the conflict. War and Politics in the Sudan thus offers a fresh and timely analysis of a region long beset by civil conflict, inter-ethnic violence, and poverty, a region whose historical narrative has recently taken on a new trajectory. Those interested in post-colonial Sudanese history are sure to find Leach's arguments both persuasive and pertinent.

The First Islamist Republic Abdullahi A. Gallab, 2016-03-16 Adding a new dimension to the ongoing scholarly and political debate about Islamism or political Islam within the context of modern politics in Africa, the Middle East, and the Muslim world, this study details the development and disintegration of the Islamists' Republic in the Sudan. The Islamists' regime in the Sudan has propagated a distinctive ideology whose declared aim was to create a primary model of an Islamist state. This book is the story of the social world of Islamism. Based on extensive field work inside and outside the regime, it provides an entry point into its local and global worlds as they interact and collide with each other. The book places considerable emphasis on the theoretical development and growth of Islamism to address the profound transformations within political Islam. Political scientists, sociologists, and scholars interested in religion and Middle Eastern and African studies should read this book.

Sudan's "Southern Problem" Sebatso C. Manoeli, 2019-12-04 The book offers a history of the discourses and diplomacies of Sudan's civil wars. It explores the battle for legitimacy between the Sudanese state and Southern rebels. In particular, it examines how racial thought and rhetoric were used in international debates about the political destiny of the South. By placing the state and rebels within the same frame, the book uncovers the competition for Sudan's reputation. It reveals the discursive techniques both sides employed to elicit support from diverse audiences amidst the intellectual ferment of Pan-Africanism, the Cold War, and Black liberation politics. It maintains that the interplay of silences and articulations in both the rebels and the state's texts concealed and complicated aspects of the country's political conflict. In sum, the book demonstrates that the war of words waged abroad represents a strategic but often overlooked aspect of the Sudanese civil wars.

Sudan After Nimeiri Peter Woodward, 2013-04-15 At the end of 1984 Sudan shot into the headlines as a result of famines, floods, locusts, political instability and civil war. In describing the collapse of Sudan's state and economy, Sudan After Nimeiri emphasises the extent of the country's current predicament and explains the difficulty of potential solutions. Amongst the issues discussed are environmental and ecological problems, economic collapse, famine, debt, refugees, the role of Islam in Sudanese politics, Nimeiri's downfall and the administrative problems facing the transitional and present governments.

Multidimensional Change in Sudan (1989-2011) Barbara Casciari, Munzoul A. M. Assal, François Ireton, 2015-04-01 Based on fieldwork largely collected during the CPA interim period by Sudanese and European researchers, this volume sheds light on the dynamics of change and the relationship between microscale and macroscale processes which took place in Sudan between the 1980s and the independence of South Sudan in 2011. Contributors various disciplinary approaches: socio-anthropological, geographical, political, historical, linguistic. Focus on the general issue of access to resources. The book analyzes major transformations which affected Sudan in the framework of globalization, including land and urban issues, water management, new actors and new conflicts, and language identity and ideology.

Identity, Citizenship, and Violence in Two Sudans: Reimagining a Common Future A. Idris, 2013-08-20 The 2011 split of Sudan and the conflicts that have followed make it a case of ongoing significance for understanding state building in Africa. Examining both the north-south divide and the spread of violence from Darfur, this study shows how colonial legacies have shaped state formation and charts out a path to inclusive citizenship and democracy.

Sudan, 1898-1989 Peter Woodward, 1990 This book analyzes the role of the state since independence, examining the reasons for civil war, economic collapse, fall of civilian government, imposition of martial law, 2. politicization of cultural, 3. the state's part in the competition among classes, religious groups, etc.

Politics and Violence in Eastern Africa David M. Anderson, Øystein H. Rolandsen, 2017-10-02 Over the fifty years between 1940 and 1990 the countries of eastern Africa were embroiled in a range of debilitating and destructive conflicts, starting with the wars of independence but then incorporating rebellion, secession and local insurrection as the Cold War replaced colonialism. The articles gathered here illustrate how significant, widespread and dramatic this violence was. In these years, violence was used as a principal instrument in the creation and consolidation of the authority of the state, and it was also regularly and readily utilised by those who wished to challenge state authority through insurrection and secession. Why was it that eastern Africa should have experienced such extensive and intensive violence in the fifty years before 1990? Was this resort to violence a consequence of imperial rule, the legacy of oppressive colonial domination under a coercive and non-representative state system? Did essential contingencies such as the Cold War provoke and promote the use of violence? Or was it a choice made by Africans themselves?

Darfur Chris Vaughan,2015 This work engages with a fundamental question in the study of African history and politics to what extent did the colonial state re define the character of local politics in the societies it governed Existing scholarship on Darfur under the Anglo Egyptian Condominium 1916 1956 has suggested that colonial governance here represented either straightforward continuity or utterly transformative change from the region s deep history of independent statehood under the Darfur Sultanate This book argues that neither view is adequate it shows that British rule bequeathed a culture of governance to Darfur which often rested on state coercion and violence but which was also influenced by enduring local conceptions of the relationship between ruler and ruled and the agendas of local actors The state was perceived as a resource as well as a threat by local peoples Although the British did introduce significant changes to the character of governance in Darfur local populations negotiated the significance of these innovations challenging the authority of state appointed chiefs defying official attempts to police the boundaries of ethnic territories and competing for the resources of political support and development that the state represented Even the violence of the state was shaped and channelled by the initiative of local elites Finally the author suggests that contemporary conflict and politics in the region must be understood in the context of this deeper history of interaction between state and local agendas in shaping everyday realities of power and governance Chris Vaughan is Lecturer in African History at Liverpool John Moores University Previously he taught at the Universities of Durham Leeds Liverpool and Edinburgh His articles have appeared in the Journal of African History and the Journal of Imperial and Commonwealth History He is co editor with Lotje De Vries and Mareike Schomerus of The Borderlands of South Sudan Rebel Economies Nicola Di Cosmo,Didier Fassin,Clémence Pinaud,2021-05-18 As a pervasive occurrence in the contemporary world wars and their economic sources are defining social and political processes in a variety of national and transnational contexts Rebel Economies Warlords Insurgents Humanitarians explores historical anthropological and political dimensions of war economies by non state actors across different periods and regions while presenting their multiple manifestations as a unified congruent phenomenon Through a variety of conceptual and disciplinary approaches the authors investigate in the past and present and across three continents the nexuses between economy war social transformation and state building revealing in the process differences and similarities that would otherwise remain hidden Through this broad gauge approach the book aims first to rethink much of the debate around non state war economies and secondly to expand the conversation by consciously treating this theme as a conspicuous and distinct aspect of both economy and war This is not just a different approach but a fundamental departure from the ways in which current discussions over the economy of wars civil conflicts and revolutions have informed research orientations over several decades

War and Statehood in South Sudan Manfred Öhm, 2015-03-26 This study provides empirically based insights into the relationship between war statehood and peaceful conflict resolution during the second Sudanese civil war and following the independence of South Sudan 2011 Several influencing factors have been identified the dynamics of political and ethnic conflict the authoritarian character of the former rebel movement SPLM the role of the church and of traditional leaders in local peace processes and how the enormous presence of international aid organizations has affected both war and statehood The empirical findings suggest that South Sudan is not an example of state failure but rather part of a broader process of state formation As such this collection argues that state building is indeed possible during war The analysis of the independent South Sudan post 2011 illustrates that the country is still struck by strong political and ethnic conflicts and continued violence This is a book that is relevant and full of insights for social scientists and practitioners of development co operation
