

There are several reasons why an experimentalist is likely to have a different view of the world than a theorist. First, the experimentalist is likely to be more concerned with the practical aspects of the world, such as the design of experiments and the interpretation of data. Second, the experimentalist is likely to be more concerned with the limitations of the experimental method, such as the possibility of systematic errors and the need for replication. Third, the experimentalist is likely to be more concerned with the specific details of the world, such as the properties of the materials used in the experiment and the behavior of the subjects. Finally, the experimentalist is likely to be more concerned with the process of discovery, such as the formulation of hypotheses and the testing of predictions.

Stalking the Plumed Serpent and Other Adventures in Herpetology D. Bruce Means, 2014-10-01. Based on his more than 40 years of field research, Means, an expert on the eastern diamondback rattlesnake, reveals the biological complexity and beauty of the animals he has studied. In Australia, Means searches for the fiercey reputed to be the world's deadliest terrestrial snake. In Mexico, he stalks the rattlesnake that might have served as the model for the mythical plumed serpent of Mayan art. In Florida, he is chased by cottonmouth moccasins. Through his experiences, Means hopes that readers will gain a new appreciation for animals called herps or creepy crawly things. Venomous Snakes of Texas Andrew H. Price, 2010-01-01. In this authoritative field guide, you'll find full color photographs and a county by county distribution map for each species. Each species common and scientific name, description, look-alikes, and a summary sketch of its habitat, behavior, reproduction, venom characteristics, predator-prey relationships, and fossil record.
