0.9% NaCl (Normal Saline Solution, 1000L)

Normal saline solution (0.9% NaCl) up to 1000L, is a non-sterile solution of NaCl that contains water, sodium chloride (0.9%), and chloride (0.9%). It has an osmolality of 285 mOsm/L and gives no calories. It is called normal saline solution because the percentage of sodium chloride dissolved in the solution is similar to the usual concentration of sodium and chloride in the intracellular space. Normal saline is the primary solution of choice for expanding the extracellular fluid (ECF) volume because it does not enter the intracellular fluid (ICF). It is administered to correct extracellular fluid volume deficit because it remains within the ECF.

Normal saline is the IV fluid of choice alongside the administration of blood products. It is often used for replacing large volume losses such as in burn injuries and trauma. It should not be used for heart failure, pulmonary edema, and renal impairment, as conditions that cause sodium retention as it may risk fluid volume overload.
