

1 MODELING AND ASSESSING LANGUAGE PROFICIENCY¹

Since the beginning of this century psychologists and educationalists have been involved in a continuing debate on the number of factors implicated in language performance. Up till the late seventies factor analytic approaches have led to the definition of various numbers of language dimensions. In the early years of this century Spearman (1904; 1927) argued that a single factor, g, was of interest to explain all intellectual behavior. Thurstone's (1938) model contained seven primary mental abilities of which at least two were explicitly verbal: 'verbal comprehension' and 'verbal fluency'. Later researchers proposed several variables within the domain of language behavior alone (e.g. Davis 1944; Thurstone, 1946; Davis, 1972; Spearitt, 1972; Thorndike, 1973). Meanwhile, the division of g into several subfactors in general human intelligence models continued, almost always including a number of 'verbal' factors (Cattell, 1971; Vernon, 1971), and culminated in extremely complex models such as the Structure of Intellect model (Guilford, 1967; Guilford & Hoepfner, 1971; Guilford, 1982) with a total of 150 factors of which many are related to language behavior.

Much of this debate could have been avoided, given a better understanding of the poor quality of some measures to assess dimensionality (Carroll, 1989; Berger & Knol, 1990), problems in interpreting the results from correlational analyses in general (e.g., Cejlan, 1985) and from exploratory factor analysis in particular (Goold, 1981; Völlmer and Sang, 1983), the equivalence of the metatheoretical assumptions underlying the different models (Stenberg, 1985a), or preferably, if Thurstone's (1947:56) own admonition, had been taken seriously, i.e., that "... factor analysis has its principal use at the borderline of science ... especially in those domains where basic and fruitful concepts are essentially lacking and where crucial experiments have been difficult to conceive".

The Construct of Language Proficiency Ludo Verhoeven, John H.A.L. de Jong, 1992-10-29 This book aims to open up new perspectives in the study of language proficiency by bringing together current research from different fields in psychology and linguistics. All contributions start out from empirical studies which are then related to applications in language assessment. The book also serves as a survey of recent developments in psycholinguistic research in the Netherlands. The book starts out with a thorough introduction of international literature on models of language proficiency, language development and its assessment. Section 1 deals with first language proficiency and addresses such problems as grammar in early child language, grammatical proficiency and its variance across a range of ages, reading abilities and writing skills. Section 2 focuses on multilingual proficiency and deals with test bias in relation to the background of the second language learner, bilingual proficiency in ethnic minority children, the development of the second language learner lexicon, communicative competence of school age children in the context of second language learning, the assessment of foreign language attrition and the dimensionality in oral foreign language proficiency. The Construct of Language Proficiency Ludo Verhoeven, John H. Understanding L2 Proficiency Eun Hee Jeon, Yo In'nam, 2022-08-04 This edited volume is a collection of theoretical and empirical overviews of second language L2 proficiency based on four skills: reading, writing, listening and speaking. Each skill is reviewed in terms of how it has been conceptualized, measured and studied over the years in relation to relevant sub-constructs of the language skill under discussion. This is followed by meta-analyses of correlation coefficients that examine the relationship between the L2 skill in question and its component variables. Unlike most meta-analyses that have a limited range of variables under investigation, our meta-analyses are much larger in scope to better clarify such relationships. By combining theoretical and empirical approaches, the book is helpful in deepening the understanding of how subcomponents or various variables are related to a particular L2 skill

Measuring L2 Proficiency Pascale Leclercq, Amanda Edmonds, Heather Hilton, 2014-07-01 The creation of the Common European Framework of Reference for Languages CEFR has given rise to interest and debate among policy makers testers teachers and researchers alike in the reliability and feasibility of the assessment of second language L2 proficiency This volume brings together concrete ideas on identifying and measuring L2 proficiency from different branches of SLA research psycholinguistic sociolinguistic corpus based applied linguistics to contribute to a deeper understanding of what it means to be proficient in an L2 The chapters introduce a wide range of tools that are innovative reliable and easy to use for the evaluation of learners language level with respect to both productive and receptive skills and provide a variety of answers to the question of how to assess L2 proficiency in a valid reliable and practical manner The collection will therefore inspire language teachers teacher trainers and language testing specialists and help them adapt their assessment practices when necessary and will also be a valuable resource for postgraduate students and researchers
