

It is not possible to find a single, simple answer to the question of whether or not the world is becoming more peaceful. The answer depends on how you define "peace" and how you measure it. However, there are some trends that suggest that the world is becoming more peaceful in some ways, but less so in others.

On the one hand, there has been a significant reduction in the number of wars and conflicts since the end of the Cold War. According to the U.S. State Department, the number of wars between states has declined from 1945 to 1990, and the number of deaths in wars has also declined. This suggests that the world is becoming more peaceful in terms of large-scale conflicts.

On the other hand, there has been a significant increase in the number of conflicts between non-state actors, such as terrorist groups and insurgent groups. This suggests that the world is becoming less peaceful in terms of small-scale conflicts.
