

Arab Art as seen Through The Monuments of Cairo from the Seventh Century to the Eighteenth, by EMILE PRISSE D'AVENNES, translated by J. I. Erythraspis. Originally published by A. Morel, Paris 1877. Le Sycomore, Paris; Al Saqi Books, London 1983. $150.

When this text first appeared in 1877, in French, it seemed an architectural counterpart to Edward Lane's An Account of the Manners and Customs of the Modern Egyptians (1860). Emile Prisse d'Avennes, educated at the Ecole d'arts et métiers, Châlons, worked in Egypt in various capacities: as an engineer of hydraulic projects at the time of Muhammad 'Ali, as a teacher of engineering in a military academy in Upper Egypt and, ultimately, as an Egyptologist excavating in Karnak. In addition, he traveled widely in the Middle East and fought in the Greek War of Independence, before ultimately settling in Egypt and converting to Islam.

This text is essentially a document of its own time. That is, it is a powerful purveyor of nineteenth-century Orientalist views of Arabs, Egyptians, architecture, and history. Readers seeking a more critical approach to the architectural history of Egypt should consult Creswell and more recent works. This book, however, is still useful to those who need to see (selected aspects of) early nineteenth-century Cairo. In numerous carefully executed drawings, many finished in rich color, some of the public buildings, elements of domestic architecture and furnishings, facades, and window grilles are detailed for the reader.

In addition, the plates of this text (from the original edition and now made more available through this reissue) will be documents useful to contemporary historians of Moorish architecture in Europe and the United States. It was the drawings in this text, and in others like it from the nineteenth century, that served as models for turn-of-the-century Western architects busy creating the mansion monuments to satisfy individual Western taste for the Orient.

Wall Paintings and Other Figurative Mural Art in Qajar Iran Willem M. Floor, 2005 Although in the last few years the study of painting in 19th century Iran has made considerable progress it still remains somewhat tradition bound It would seem that art historians find it difficult to go beyond oil paintings lacquer and enamel In 1998 Robinson the doyen of Qajar art history wrote Qajar painting found its most prestigious outlets in oil painting lacquer and enamel In this study it is shown that paintings were probably the most important form of expression for painters for many centuries and as prestigious as the other forms of painting Mural paintings were very popular and were to be found on various types of buildings ranging from the royal palaces private homes bath houses to a religious shrine Painting was a craft and a business that was actively pursued by artisans in most major towns in response to a general demand for figurative art As to the themes depicted these remained basically limited to i dynastic and epic Qajar family portraits battles hunts Shahnameh scenes ii sensual flora fauna erotic and iii religious prophets Imams ulama subjects These subjects occurred in any type of building irrespective of its function The wide use of figurative representation in religious buildings and practice is of great interest People almost invariably assume that Moslems until recent times did not tolerate paintings and the like of humans and animals adorning public and private buildings and publications This study shows otherwise There is even evidence of the use of paintings as religious icons which is a totally neglected subject Rock reliefs and other forms of sculptured works in and on buildings and its accessories such as doors show a similar development as mural paintings Although information is even less copious than for wall paintings it is clear that the depiction of living beings in the forms of sculptures was very widespread and pre dates the Qajar period The nature and form of murals were influenced by the increased contacts between Persia Iran and the outside world in particular Europe and India This holds in particular for the use of prints and the occurrence of European scenes in frescos and other forms of paintings Willem Floor has written extensively on many aspects of social economic and art history of Iran Journal of the Society of Architectural Historians Society of Architectural Historians, 1986 Includes special issues Die Welt des Islams, 1999
