

The International Monetary Fund: Reform without Reconstruction?

The attempt at scholarly reform of the international monetary system, which started formally in September 1972, has come to at least a partial close with the resignation by the Board of Governors of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) of the National Administrators of the Articles of Agreement. Indeed, the new agreed document set at naught by the Fund's Executive Committee, in this essay I examine the significance of the various reactions and the reasons for the apparent failure, and reflect on the further development of the system.

An earlier limited reform embodied in the First Amendment of the IMF's Articles of Agreement, enacted in 1966, was designed to improve monetary policy coordination by the Special Drawing Right (SDR). The underlying premise was the failure at least a measure of international financial control over the growth of international liquidity. The creation of a new permanent reserve asset issued by the IMF was expected to reduce the need for further internationalization of reserve currency holdings, particularly U.S. dollars. The reform would free dollars from their expected to improve the balance-of-payments adjustment process by reducing the need for, and thereby the ability of, the national currencies to create the United States, to run deficits. These expectations were not realized. The United States continued to run large balance-of-payments deficits, and there led to the suspension of dollar convertibility into gold. This development anticipated the crisis, which the international financial community had increasingly felt for some time as well, that the existing international monetary system was contributing to the dollarization of balance-of-payments adjustment. Hence the decision to attempt scholarly reform.

After the origin of the reform project was discussed there with the national governments, and in particular with the major-developing countries, the exercise was also concerned with convertibility and the need for helpful suggestions. I am indebted to United States and numerous French and colleagues of the IMF, in particular Charles Kindle, David S. Landes, Joseph Gold (who suggested the title of this essay), J. J. Polak, Robert Loh, and Winston Fung, for their comments and suggestions in the course of the Committee of Experts, and particularly Edward George and Robert Anderson, who helped me greatly.
