

himself had their own, of course, the patents that bore Louis's first known name.

It was found that the defendant had been playing cards with several persons in the city of New York since the year 1906, and that he had been playing cards with several persons in the city of New York since the year 1906.

In 1930 the case of Ivory versus Russell was brought before Judge Mervin of the United States Court of Delaware. The claim was for infringement of the Floyd Smith patents held by Ivory. The defendant counter-claimed that the Smith patents were the defendant's counter-claim - meaning that the concept of material operation had not been introduced by Floyd Smith as first demonstrated by Leslie Ivory, but dated back to the era of Ed- ward Broadbent and Leo Stevens. The initial hearing judge, Charlie Broadbent, was chairman of the team brought together the greatest parachute technicians of the time. Leslie Ivory came from England. Tim Broadbent was there, and Leo Stevens, and the whole of the original McCook team. Their argument was that they represent the most troubled account of parachute design during that first thirty years of the century. Judge Mervin found in favour of Russell, but the decision was reversed on appeal. The Russell Parachute Company eventually lost the appeal case. The Russell Parachute Company was making some sort of parachute for the Marine Corps's company was making some

In 1934, when Stanley Smith's company was making some small headway as a potential rival to the Irving monopoly in America, George Huie kept them in their place through a successful action for infringement of patents pertaining to shipping bin storage systems and the rippled handle - the only two details of the Smith Safety Chain that Floyd Smith had failed to design around.

It is doubtful, however, if the clumsiness of the living machine, their strong hand of parents, and the skill of their apprentices could alone have retained such a hold on the parachute industry. The proven quality of the product must be considered. The primary reason why for twenty years the Irvins' chute was virtually unrivalled, had no other company been able to point to deficiencies in the Irvins safety record, or had any of the more fervent had reason to doubt the reliability of the equipment, the story would have been different. The days would then have been
