Taste & Smell

Taste & smell

Most of our special senses are chemoreception systems: gustation (taste) and olfaction (smell). The degree to which we respond to taste or olfaction, how many and how often we eat, and how we respond to molecules dissolved in fluid (taste) and solid (smell) are all determined by the state of our olfactory and gustatory systems. The sense of taste is less discriminatory than the sense of smell, and there is an overlap between taste receptors. The sense of smell is highly discriminatory, with several types of olfactory receptors, each responding to particular molecules. Taste and olfaction are related to smell, vision and hearing, important with the taste food substances, but taste is particularly affected by the sense of smell.

Concentrations

Taste receptors vary depending on the concentration of molecules in a given solution or solid. For low concentrations, taste and smell receptors may be more sensitive.

Gustation

Gustation, the sense of taste, gives us information about the food and drink that we consume. Taste buds on the primary gustatory organ, the tongue, contain chemoreceptors called gustatory cells. These taste buds have four basic components: sweet, sour, bitter and salty. A fifth taste, glutamate or umami, has been reported. This flavor is associated with proteins, as in aged cheese or meat broth.

The taste bud

However, substances that produce taste, food, with receptor molecules on the surface of the microvilli. The resulting receptor potential travels to the basal end of the gustatory cell, where the signal is chemically transmitted across the synapse to the nerve endings. Gustatory cells live about 10 days, after which they are replaced by new cells generated from basal cells at the base of the taste buds.

Olfaction

The sense of smell is called olfaction, or the detection of odors. Olfaction depends on specialized chemical receptors, or chemoreceptors, located within the olfactory epithelium. These receptors are designed to respond to small amounts of an odorant, a molecule that can be smelled. The brain integrates the input from several different receptors to identify a particular odor. Humans can detect about 10,000 odors.

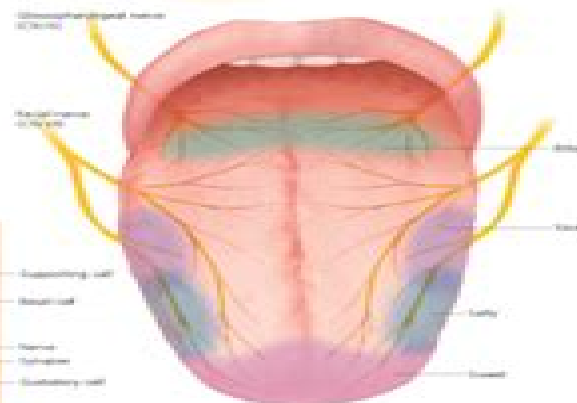

As air flows through the nose, the odors across the nasal cavity pass through the olfactory epithelium, bringing odorant molecules into contact with the olfactory neurons. Binding increases the ability to detect odors by increasing the volume of air inhaled, which can increase the number of receptors.

Olfactory receptors

Olfactory receptors

Olfactory receptors in the olfactory epithelium are produced by the olfactory gland, then travel to receptor molecules on the olfactory cells. The receptor potential that is generated travels along the axon to the olfactory bulb, where it meets the input to the higher brain centers. Unlike other senses, the olfactory neurons are connected directly to the cerebral cortex, rather than through the thalamus in the cerebrum.

Compound sweet and salty tastes, we are left with more sensitive to bitter compounds, and about 1,000 taste buds are sensitive to sour tastes. The taste buds are located in the taste pore, where the taste hairs extend and taste buds can be found. The taste buds are located in the taste pore, where the taste hairs extend and taste buds can be found. The taste buds are located in the taste pore, where the taste hairs extend and taste buds can be found.

The synapse

Neurons communicate with other cells at a synapse, the site of a nerve impulse transmission. The space between the presynaptic, or sending, neuron and the postsynaptic, or receiving, cell is called the synaptic cleft. An impulse enters at the top of the axon, the axon hillock, where "trigger" molecules called neurotransmitters. These highly specialized chemicals carry nerve impulses from the presynaptic cell to the postsynaptic cell. The impulse enters the cell, where inhibition or activation occurs in the target cell.
