

The Role of the Pastor's Wife in Ministry

Josiah B. Andor

ABSTRACT—This article sought to find out the roles that pastor's wives play in their husbands' ministry that have made them seem indispensable in the ministry. The pastor's wife is viewed as a woman and as a helper. Three types of pastors' wives are identified: the detached, the supportive, and the incorporated. Each of these has ways in which it affects the pastor's ministry. The paper postulates that roles of pastor's wives can be divided into domestic roles (roles at home), spiritual roles (roles at church), social roles (roles in the community), and occupational roles (roles at work). Finally, the paper compares the results of a survey conducted among pastors' wives in Ghana and the roles they perform in their husbands' ministries. The paper concludes that pastors' wives are great helpers in the ministry of their husbands.

I. Introduction

In The Adventist Home, Ellen White writes, "The wife of the minister of the Gospel can be a most successful helper and a great blessing to her husband or a hindrance to him in his work" (White 1952, p. 355). She explains that it will depend on the wife if a minister will rise from day to day in his sphere of usefulness or sink to the ordinary level. She continues: "Satan is ever at work to dishearten and lead astray ministers whom God has chosen to preach the truth. The most effectual way in which he can work is through home influences, through unconsecrated companions" (White, 1952, p. 355). By these, Ellen White seems to emphasize the importance of pastors' wives and the impact they have on the pastor's work.
