The Firing Line:

The Firing Line Robert William Chambers, 2020-09-28 As the wind veered and grew cooler a ribbon of haze appeared above the Gulf stream Young Hamil resting on his oars gazed absently into the creeping mist Under it the ocean sparkled with subdued brilliancy through it shoreward green palms and palmettos turned silvery and as the fog spread the sea pier the vast white hotel bathing house cottage pavilion faded to phantoms tinted with rose and pearl Leaning there on his oars he could still make out the distant sands flecked with the colours of sunshades and bathing skirts the breeze dried his hair and limbs but his swimming shirt and trunks still dripped salt water Inshore a dory of the beach guard drifted along the outer line of breakers beyond which the more adventurous bathers were diving from an anchored raft Still farther out moving dots indicated the progress of hardier swimmers one in particular a girl capped with a brilliant red kerchief seemed to be already nearer to Hamil than to the shore It was all very new and interesting to him the shore with its spectral palms and giant caravansary the misty opalescent sea where a white steam yacht lay anchored north of him the Ariani from which he had come and on board of which the others were still doubtless asleep Portlaw Malcourt and Wayward And at thought of the others he yawned and moistened his lips still feverish from last night s unwisdom and leaning forward on his oars sat brooding cradled by the flowing motion of the sea The wind was still drawing into the north he felt it never strong but always a little cooler in his hair and on his wet swimming shirt The flat cloud along the Gulf stream spread thickly coastward and after a little while the ghosts of things terrestrial disappeared All around him now blankness save for the gray silhouette of the Ariani A colourless canopy surrounded him centred by a tiny pool of ocean Overhead through the vanishing blue hundreds of wild duck were stringing out to sea under his tent of fog the tarnished silver of the water formed a floor smoothly unquiet Sounds from the land hitherto unheard now came strangely distinct the cries of bathers laughter the muffled shock of the surf doubled and redoubled along the sands the barking of a dog at the water s edge Clear and near sounded the ship s bell on the Ariani a moment s rattle of block and tackle a dull call answered and silence Through which without a sound swept a great bird with scarce a beat of its spread wings and behind it another and at exact intervals another and another in impressive processional sailing majestically through the fog white pelicans winging inland to the lagoons A few minutes later the wind which had become fitful suddenly grew warm All around him now the mist was dissolving into a thin golden rain the land breeze freshened blowing through distant jasmine thickets and orange groves and a soft fragrance stole out over the sea As the sun broke through in misty splendour the young man brooding on his oars closed his eyes and at the same instant his boat careened violently almost capsizing as a slender wet shape clambered aboard and dropped into the bows As the boat heeled under the shock Hamil had instinctively flung his whole weight against the starboard gunwale Now he recovered his oars and his balance at the same time and as he swung half around his uncereemonious visitor struggled to sit upright still fighting for breath
