A Memoir of Creativity Piri Halasz, 2009-03-30 A Memoir of Creativity chronicles one woman's life journey as she derives a theory revealing meaning in abstract painting from varied personal and professional experiences and tells how she locates this theory within a broader social context In 1966 Piri Halasz became the first woman within living memory to write a cover story for Time and not just any cover story either the notorious one on Swinging London With wit and wisdom she provides a glimpse into her red diaper childhood as well as reporting on her climb at Time from research to the writing staff Vividly she describes her controversial career as a female journalist during the sixties offering an inside view of newsweekly rivalries during that tempestuous decade Halasz then moves on to her initiation into the art world her lively interaction with some of its most distinguished denizens and her immersion in graduate school She concludes with what she has learned about art art history and history itself since the early eighties applying that knowledge to better understand the twenty first century Through sharing her life story Halasz encourages others to remain open to new experiences to try different ways of seeing and to use creativity to tackle hurdles

Tabooed Jung: Marginality as Power C. Gallant, 2016-02-02 Ever since Jung's break with Freud he has been excluded from both the psychoanalytic discourse and those schools of literary criticism influenced by psychoanalysis But this very exclusion has shaped the discourse Further many of the analytic writings of Jung and the post Jungian school of Developmental Jungians are parallel to work by contemporary ego psychologists and feminists and could contribute to those fields Jung's entire case throws much light upon the state of marginalization its effects and its powers

Habermas, Kristeva, and Citizenship Noëlle McAfee, 2000 Do poststructuralist accounts of the self undermine the prospects for effective democratic politics In addressing this question Noëlle McAfee brings together the theories of Jürgen Habermas and Julia Kristeva two major figures whose work is seldom juxtaposed She examines their respective notions of subjectivity and politics and their implicit definitions of citizenship the extent to which someone is able to deliberate and act in community with others Habermas Kristeva and Citizenship begins by tracing the rise of modern and poststructural views of subjectivity and then critiques these views as they are represented in the writings of Habermas and Kristeva McAfee argues that Habermas's theory of subjectivity is overly optimistic about the possibility for individuals to know their own interests and act autonomously Kristeva's poststructuralism has its own problems it seems to limit political agency since it considers the subject to be split and at odds with itself Nevertheless this book shows how Kristevan conceptions of the self can contribute to Habermas's hope for a more democratic deliberative politics Combining an insight from poststructural theory that identity is constituted by a web of relationships with the theory of deliberative democracy McAfee argues that we need not be the kinds of individuals supposed by the modern liberal tradition to be effective political agents The more we recognize our indebtedness to and relationship with others in our midst the more likely we are to be capable members of political communities
