Verses from a Father in Mourning Robert S. Velves, Once upon a time in a land far away there lived a grieving father He carried his heartache like a heavy burden and his tears fell like raindrops on a stormy day He had lost his beloved child and his world was forever changed But one day as he wandered through the forest he stumbled upon a magical tree Its leaves were a vibrant shade of green and they shimmered in the sunlight like precious jewels The father felt drawn to the tree and he reached out to touch its bark Suddenly he felt a jolt of energy coursing through his body He closed his eyes and when he opened them again he found himself in a different world The sky was a brilliant shade of purple and the clouds were made of cotton candy The trees were tall and whimsical with branches that reached up to the heavens As he explored this new world the father came across a group of colorful birds They sang a sweet melody that filled his heart with joy He watched as they flew from tree to tree leaving trails of glitter in their wake The father continued on his journey and soon he came across a sparkling river The water was crystal clear and it sparkled like diamonds in the sunlight In the distance he could see a majestic unicorn drinking from the water's edge As he approached the unicorn he noticed a small delicate flower growing at the base of the tree It was a beautiful shade of blue and it seemed to glow with a gentle light The father picked the flower and held it close to his heart Suddenly he felt a warm breeze on his face and he knew it was time to return to his own world As he opened his eyes he found himself back in the forest with the magical tree towering over him The father realized that although he could never bring his child back he could find solace in the beauty of the world around him He knew that every time he looked at the flower he would be reminded of the whimsical world he had discovered and the hope it had brought him
