indistinct and confused that one is at a loss to know which of them they describe yet the nature and situation of them being known he must be convinced that they were acquainted with them all but confounded them together under the common name of the Fortunate Islands The islands Madeira and Porto Santo seem to answer to the description of the Fortunate Islands in Plutarch's Life of Sertorius which is as follows When Sertorius was at the mouth of the river Betis in Spain he met with seamen newly arrived from two islands in the Atlantic which are divided from one another only by a narrow channel and are distant from the coast of Africa ten thousand furlongs these are called the Fortunate Islands where the rain falls seldom and then in moderate showers but for the most part they have gentle breezes bringing along with them soft dews which render the soil not only fat and fit to be ploughed and planted but so abundantly fruitful that it produces of its own accord plants and fruits for plenty and delicacy sufficient to feed and delight the inhabitants who may here enjoy all things without trouble or labour About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
