Abstract: Faecal carriage of extended-spectrum cephalosporin-resistant (ESC-R) Enterobacterales in healthy pets is a concerning issue. This study aimed to determine the prevalence, genetic background, and potential for interspecies transmission of these bacteria between dogs and humans within the same household (HH) or shelter environment in Romania. Faecal samples ($n = 263$) collected from healthy dogs ($n = 102$), their owners ($n = 32$), as well as dogs ($n = 110$) and staff ($n = 19$) from dog shelters, were screened for ESC-R carriage. Clonal relatedness of canine and human Escherichia coli isolates was established using Fourier Transform Infrared Spectroscopy (FTIR), followed by Illumina WGS of selected isolates. The highest prevalence of ESC-R Enterobacterales faecal carriage was identified in staff working at dog shelters (78.9%), followed by dogs from households (44.11%), dog owners (43.7%), and dogs from shelters (27%). FTIR identified 15 clusters of closely related E. coli isolates, including dog and human isolates from the same environment. Co-carriage of ESC-R isolates in both the dog and owner was identified in 12 HHs (37.5%), with two HHs (6%) having both the owner and dog carrying isolates with identical FTIR spectra, phylogroup, resistance genes, and lnc plasmids. Major ExPEC lineages such as ST127, ST10, ST155, and ST68 were detected in human and dog isolates. Our study revealed a high prevalence of faecal ESC-R E. coli carriage in both dogs and humans from Romanian households and shelters, where bidirectional clonal transmission between humans and dogs is likely. Furthermore, we identified ESC-R Enterobacterales co-carriage in people and dogs sharing the same environment using FTIR, demonstrating its value in AMR surveillance for humans and animals.

1. Introduction

Production of extended-spectrum beta-lactamases (ESBLs) remains one of the most important resistance mechanisms to extended-spectrum cephalosporins (ESCs; e.g., cefepime, cefotaxime, ceftazidime, and ceftriaxone) in Enterobacterales from both humans and animals [1,2]. In addition, numerous studies over the last two decades have shown that extended-spectrum cephalosporin-resistant (ESC-R) Enterobacterales have been isolated with increasing frequency from humans and animals [3,4]. Importantly, the presence of ESBL, AmpC beta-lactamase, and plasmid-mediated quinolone resistance (PMQR) genes on mobile genetic elements facilitates horizontal transmission leading to multidrug resistant (MDR) isolates in both human and animal hosts [2,5]. In addition, ESBL resistance genes also have the potential to spread via successful bacterial clones or lineages (Woodford,
