launch from the steamer arrived at the jetty off the French Bund we were met by the Shanghai Taotai the highest official in the city the Shanghai Magistrate and numerous other officials all dressed in their official robes The Taotai told my father that he had prepared the Tien Ho Gung Temple of the Queen of Heaven for us to reside in during our stay in Shanghai but my father refused the offer saying that he had telegraphed from Hong Kong and made all arrangements to go to the Hotel des Colonies in the French Concession We had had previous experience staying in this temple while on our way to Japan where my father went as Minister in 1895 and did not care to try it a second time The building is very old and very much out of repair It was a beautiful place in its prime but had been allowed to go to rack and ruin The custom is that the magistrate has to find a place and supply the food etc for high officials when passing through and it is not exactly the thing to refuse their kind offer but my father was always very independent and politely declined all proffers of assistance

Secret World of the Forbidden City Xin Yang,Ch'eng-ju Chu,2000-01-01 The Forbidden City Geremie Barme,2009 Built by the Ming emperor in the fifteenth century as the earthly reflection of the realm of the Jade Emperor whose court was said to rule over the whole universe the Forbidden City consists of a series of courtyards that surround the majestic Hall of Supreme Harmony The life that went on inside this magnificent structure is chronicled in the context of the many characters that shaped its history from the Ming and Manchu Emperors who ruled in its splendour to the Dowager Empress who presided over its decline Nearly 600 years after it was built the Forbidden City is still undoubtedly one of the greatest Wonders of the World
