A recent study into the archaeological profession in 21 European countries resulted in recognising gender equality as a major topic that needs attention. The overall trend is that women will form the future majority of workers in archaeology. However, the conditions under which women work differ by country, and in several countries, women are paid less and are not well represented in leadership positions. Gender equality needs to be put on the agenda and each country should take measurements to close the gap.

Résumé: Une étude récente sur le métier d'archéologue dans 21 pays européens a eu pour effet de considérer l'égalité des sexes comme un sujet important qui nécessite une attention particulière. L'égalité des sexes doit devenir une préoccupation majeure, et chaque pays doit prendre des mesures pour réduire cet écart.
