Artificial Love Paul Shephard, 2003-05-09 A vision of architecture that includes sculpture machines and technology and encapsulates the history of the human species According to Paul Shephard architecture is the rearranging of the world for human purposes Sculpture machines and landscapes are all architecture every bit as much as buildings are In his writings Shephard examines old assumptions about architecture and replaces the critical theory of the academic with the active theory of the architect citizen enamored of the world around him Artificial

Love weaves together three stories about architecture into one. The first about machines as architecture leads to speculations about technology and the human condition and to the assertion that machines are the sculptures of today. The second story is about the ways that architecture reflects the tribal and personal desires of those who make it. In the West ideas of community, multiculturalism and globalization compete furiously leaving architecture to exist as it always has as the past in the present. The third story features individual people experiencing their lives in the context of architecture. Here Shepherd borrows the rhetorical device of Shakespeare's seven ages of man to propose that each person's life imitates the accumulating history of the human species. Shepherd's version of the history of humans is a technological one in which machines become sculpture and sculpture becomes architecture. For Shepherd our machines do not separate us from nature. Rather our technology is our nature and we cannot but be in harmony with nature. The change that we have wrought in the world he says is a wonderful and powerful thing.
