

In "Fiscal harmonization in common markets" (2: 443) Shoup explains tax harmonization. It usually implies a group of tax adjustment programs somehow associated with various types of economic integration. This is so because the term tax harmonization has been developed, in response to the practical need for a general and comprehensive term which can cover a wide range of tax adjustment programs that are as yet not being identified definitely, though likely to be necessary to help in achieving a number of broad, and often competing, political and economic objectives of an economic integration. It has come to be understood that the term is often used in a special sense, with relevance only for the EEC.
